French 19th Century Arras iron garden table.

This beautiful table features a rectangular top with rounded corners over a wonderful organic base in the Art Nouveau style.

The four shapely legs terminate in flat paw feet.

The northern town of Arras was famous for its iron foundries, which produced this beautiful style of furniture up until the Second World War.

They used a unique method of extrusion - 'demi tube' - which gave the iron a rounded finish. This allowed surface water to drain and prevented rust. It also made for much more comfortable furniture!

Arras furniture peppered private and public outdoor spaces in France since production began in 1840 until it ceased in the mid 20th Century.

Their garden furniture combines durability and a stylish aesthetic, as seen in this lovely table.
