English pine pub settle, circa 1800.

Settles such as this one date from as early as the 16th Century, and they are very charming pieces of furniture.

Often they will have storage space below the seat, but in this case storage is provided by three concave fronted drawers.

Although these settles often had high backs, the back to this model is exceptionally tall. Another unusual feature is the continuation of the arm support up either side of the back, giving this settle great character.

With its charming concave front, this is a very attractive piece.
