The Elmstead is an elegant sofa of timeless design. A nod to a traditional Regency sofa, but with contemporary reworking, the clean, curving lines of the frame looks equally at home in modern and traditional interiors. The Elmstead is a sofa you really sit back into with a sweeping rake to the back. We think it looks fantastic with a generous helping of scatter cushions. We build our Elmstead up from a hardwood beech frame, using only traditional methods and materials. With a hand-tied coil-sprung seat, and a contemporary upholstered back, there is no foam used in the build up. What makes the Elmstead so comfortable is the high down content (50% down, 50% feather). The down gives the cushions lovely softness, while the feathers provide loft and spring. The castors are individually hand-cast by traditional English metal crafters to a very high standard and a variety of finishes can be achieved. We use the antique brass finish as standard. The legs can be either tapered or turned and come in a variety of woods and finishes. We use medium oak legs as our standard finish. The Elmstead, like all of our sofas, can be made completely bespoke. We want this to be your perfect sofa, so if you want it a bit bigger or smaller, softer or firmer, or anything else just ask and we will do our best to accommodate. The prices excludes fabric. If you need some help finding the perfect fabric, let us know. It takes approximately 16 metres in a plain fabric to cover a standard Elmstead. For patterns, and bespoke sizes, get in touch and we can advise on fabric quantity.
